Office manager: A real position or merely a title?

In most cases, office managers are dropped into the position with no training. The dentist assumes that all the individual has been with the practice for a while, she knows what it takes to do the job. Additionally, assistant often look at the designation of "office manager" as a reward for the employee’s hard work and dedication to the practice. That is, the dentist begins to wonder if she (or he) has made a terrible mistake.

In most cases, office managers are dropped into the position with no training. The dentist assumes that all the individual has been with the practice for a while, she knows what it takes to do the job. Additionally, assistant often look at the designation of "office manager" as a reward for the employee’s hard work and dedication to the practice. That is, the dentist begins to wonder if she (or he) has made a terrible mistake.

By Sally McKenzie, CEO

It’s interesting how people tend to evolve into certain positions in the dental practice. One in particular is that of office manager. In our consulting work, we see a lot of existing loyal employees, such as a hygienist or a dental assistant, who has "graduated" to this role.

As is often the case, they are bright and energetic, good with patients and the dentist perceives that those skills are all that is necessary to be an effective office manager. Unfortunately, it’s at this point that things start to go wrong.

The employee may exhibit too little initiative or too much control. Others on the team may resent their former colleague being promoted to a managerial position. Often, the dentist recognizes that the practice was "winging it" in terms of managing his or her office, so the practice was "winging it" in terms of managing his or her office.

If an employee has the title of office manager, but not the responsibility or any decision-making authority, he or she will eventually ‘check out’ emotionally from the position and then physically from the practice. (Photo/Courtesy of www.dreamstime.com)

The dentist assumes that because Julie was bright and energetic, good with staff and patients, etc., then he could assign her to the managerial role. Smith saw her as a rising star. Smith thought that if the individual has been with the practice for a while, she knows her most critical duty is effectively managing the employee’s time and the staff’s time. Moreover, she should be able to work under pressure because the office manager must be able to make appointments, do financial arrangements, etc. However, when she inquired as to how her duties might change, she realized that the job description was vague.

When she asked if the new position meant an increase in her salary, Smith was non-committal. When she asked if the new position meant an increase in her salary, Smith was non-committal. Julie was puzzled. “What is the true meaning of office manager? Is there a salary increase?” Julie said. Julie said.

Not surprisingly, things went downhill from there. Smith assumed that because Julie was bright and confident, she could design her role as office manager. Yet, with no direction from the dentist, she was making up her duties as she went along. Julie suggested that the team work together to develop some scheduling objectives. Smith thought that might be a good idea, but continually put Julie off each time she raised the issue.

Julie had the title of office manager, but not the responsibility or any decision-making authority. Julie eventually checked out emotionally from the position and then physically from the practice. It was a waste of the potential talent that the dentist recognized in Julie, but he could not bring himself to relinquish control of certain areas or involve a subordinate in a part-time role. It’s a concept that some dentists find just entirely too threatening to pursue.

Every employee must have a job description that clearly defines the job, spells out specific skills needed for the position and outlines precisely the duties and responsibilities. A job title is not a job description. That being said, I readily acknowledge that writing a job description for an office manager is no small challenge.

Job descriptions for multiple positions in the practice — including scheduling coordinator, treatment coordinator, financial coordinator, patient coordinator, etc. — are readily accessible on practice management websites, including McKenzie Management’s site, with the exception of office manager. Why? As Smith’s case illustrates, different dentists interpret the office manager position quite differently; and many interpret the position incorrectly.

The majority of dental practice office managers answer phones, make appointments, do financial arrangements, etc. However, these are the responsibilities of a front office employee or a business coordinator. Certainly, an office manager will often travel to the office to see patients and the staff when issues arise. In addition, the office manager needs to have the right personality traits for the position. She should be both personable and efficient. In other words, she needs to have a good balance between thinking and feeling in temperament type.

Additionally, if a practice hopes to get the most out of appointing an office manager, the employee should be comfortable working with numbers and be able to access, as well as fully understand, practice reports. Moreover, the office manager must be able to work well under pressure because she will be pulled in multiple directions.

Yet, that is just the beginning. A true office manager is responsible for overseeing practice overhead and her most critical duty is effectively managing the office’s human resources.

The office manager is in charge of recruitment, hiring and firing all employees, performance reviews, schedules, grievances, raises, salary reviews, employee policies and team meetings. The position requires leadership skills and includes overseeing and managing all of the business measurements, analyzing fees and reviewing the profit and loss reports.

The dentist is the chief executive officer (CEO) while the office manager is the chief operating officer of the corporation that is your dental practice. The office

If you have any questions or comments regarding the content of this document, please contact us at 1-800-123-4567 or info@company.com.
less hassle. more savings.

Lower rates and hassle-free online processing make it easier to save time and money with the Citi® Health Card Program.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>PAYMENT PLANS</th>
<th>MINIMUM AMOUNTS FINANCED</th>
<th>MERCHANT FEE*</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6 Months No Interest</td>
<td>$250</td>
<td>3.49%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12 Months No Interest</td>
<td>$500</td>
<td>6.29%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18 Months No Interest</td>
<td>$750</td>
<td>9.99%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>48 Month Budget Pay Plan</td>
<td>$1000</td>
<td>4.00%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Regular Revolving</td>
<td>None</td>
<td>1.99%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

New

Convenient and Easy-to-Use Online Processing:
- No additional cost to your practice
- Faster application and transaction processing
- System-Generated Transaction Receipts
- Online reporting and management tools
- Security features to protect staff access and account information

Other great Citi Health Card Program benefits:
- Low merchant fees
- Settlement in 2-3 business days
- No enrollment fees, minimum volume requirements or equipment to purchase
- Fast credit decisions
- Expert training and support

ENROLL TODAY & SAVE!
To speak with a Henry Schein Patient Financing Specialist call 1-800-443-2756 (option 1), or email hsfs@henryschein.com.
manager’s job description needs to be customized to best fit the needs of the practice, which is why you will not find a generic office manager job description on the McKenzie Management website along with all the other job descriptions. Rather, we recommend professional training geared specifically for dental office managers. This training should teach the business of dentistry, including each practice system as well as other management specialty areas. From there, the job description is built from scratch with input from the dentist and the office manager so that it serves the needs of the specific practice.

Not every practice needs an office manager. Some dentists are comfortable managing the practice as well as doing the dentistry, while others do not want to be burdened with the management responsibilities. My advice is that you don’t toss around the term office manager lightly. This is a position that carries significant responsibility and requires specific skills. If you do appoint an office manager, give her the tools to succeed via professional training.

Sally McKenzie is a nationally known lecturer and author. She is CEO of McKenzie Management, which provides highly successful and proven management services to dentistry and has since 1980. McKenzie Management offers a full line of educational and management products, which are available on its website, www.mckenzie_mgmt.com. In addition, the company offers a vast array of Business Operations Programs and team training. McKenzie is the editor of the e-Management newsletter and The Dentist’s Network newsletter and is a frequently asked to practices nationwide. To subscribe visit www.mckenzie_mgmt.com or www.thedentistinnetwork.net. She is also the Publisher of the New Dentist® magazine, www.thenewdentist.net. McKenzie welcomes specific practice questions and can be reached toll free at (877) 777-6151 or at sal@newdentist.com.

Does a dental practice need an employee handbook?

By Stuart J. Oberman, Esq.

For a practicing dentist who aims to always deliver high-quality patient care, staff retention is an important value. Staff retention aids the dental practice in providing stability and continuity and eliminates the high costs associated with employee turnover.

Obviously, staff members are more likely to continue working when they feel they are treated fairly, and consistently. In this respect, an employee handbook is important to a dental practice as it documents the practice’s policies and procedures, sets expectations and provides for a framework for uniformity.

An employee handbook can be a value addition to a dental practice in providing stability and continuity and eliminates the high costs associated with employee turnover.

For an employee handbook to be most effective, it should be written in a simple, clear, organized and concise manner to avoid confusion among employees. The employee handbook should be easy to use so that employees may refer back to it as often as they wish. The employee handbook should be distributed to every employee in the dental office.

When you distribute your employee handbook, allow all members of your dental practice an opportunity to read it. Each employee should then sign and date an acknowledgment form that states they understand and agree to be bound by the policies outlined in the employee handbook. An electronic copy of the employee handbook should be stored on a computer that all employees can access, and a bound copy should be kept in the office for general reference. The handbook should also be updated as office policies change and each employee should sign an acknowledgment for each change.

While employee handbooks vary among dental offices, there are guidelines for dentists to follow in creating their employee handbook. There are numerous laws that govern the relationship between employer and employee. Many of these laws apply to even the smallest dental practices.

It is important for the employee handbook to reflect these laws. In addition, many provisions should be included in the employee handbook to promote uniformity, thus helping employees present a united front to patients and to reduce the risk of an employee initiating a lawsuit for unfair treatment. Every employee handbook should begin with an introduction, which should welcome new employees and introduce your practice’s goals, mission statement and history. There should also be a disclaimer stating that the employee handbook is not an employment contract and does not affect the employment-at-will doctrine. After this introduction, the employee handbook should briefly describe several subjects.

While employee handbooks will identify the days and hours of the workweek as well as schedules for lunch and breaks. Full-time employees’ work schedules should be defined and differentiated from those of part-time employees. Compensation and benefits should be detailed and should inform employees of the payroll schedule, holidays, vacation, sick leave, bereavement, jury duty, military leave, leave of absence and health insurance.

If your dental office has 50 or more employees, you must comply with the Family and Medical Leave Act, and this should be included in the employee handbook. Personal use of the telephone and Internet, procedures for safety and hygiene of dental employees as well as policies on smoking and substance abuse should be included as well. The employee handbook should contain an anti-harassment policy as well as an Equal Opportunity Employment provision stating that your dental practice will not discriminate in offering employment. These provisions are extremely important, as they make it clear that you will not tolerate harassment or illegal discrimination, describes the steps that can be taken to report violations of these policies, outlines the steps that the dentist will take in responding to these allegations and confirms that the dentist is an equal-